Dear sirs,

I received information regarding the FCC consideration of allowing low power FM service to be expanded so that they would receive priority over the current FM translator services now in place.

I know this would directly affect K-LOVE, a broadcaster that I personally support financially. K-LOVE has been of great benefit to me. My family and I enjoy the entire program that is broadcast, and find it to be encouraging, uplifting, and a real blessing in our lives. My wife and daughter were in an accident on December 29, 2003. My wife died in the accident, and my 15 year old daughter came out with minor injuries. They were listening to K-LOVE when the accident occurred, and the music continued to minister to my daughter until she was able to get out of the car. I'm not sure if it is possible for me to convey how important this was for her, and for me.

K-LOVE is one of the few stations in our area that we can turn on, and not have to worry about the quality or content of the programming. That kind of positive influence needs to be furthered, not restricted by an FCC decision that would force it off the air in our area. I believe it is important for the FCC to hear listeners and financial supporters thoughts on this before proceeding. K-LOVE is an established signal across this country, and I would think, should be given priority before any new LPFM stations.

Sincerely,
